

Miyuki Delica Durability Chart

The information below is from Miyuki Co., Ltd.
This chart may be freely distributed in its entirety.

Key to the chart:

If columns A, B, and C are empty, the beads should not fade or lose their color.

A = colors which might change and/or fade due to bright sun or tarnish

B=colors which might rub off from friction or contact with skin acid

C=colors which might alter from dry-cleaning.

When Miyuki first developed Delicas, they were primarily intended for use as a loom-weaving bead. Even now in Japan, the majority of people using Delicas are making woven tapestries which are matted, framed, and hung on the wall like needlepoint. Under these conditions, Dyed and/or galvanized beads are fine because they are out of direct sunlight and protected from skin oils, etc. Problems only arise when such beads are used to make jewelry.

This chart only shows Delicas, but all Miyuki beads with the same color and finish should have the same durability as their Delica equivalents.
